Native American Grave Protection & Repatriation Act (NAGPRA), Section 106, State Law: Presentation/Explanation

Presentation by Jess Robinson on NAGPRA (Native American Graves Protection and Repatriation Act) and the section 106 state laws. Jess says the law pertains to Vermont if museums that have human remains receive federal funding. There is a federal registry that is used. It is the responsibility of the federal government to contact tribes or individuals. The laws apply to unmarked graves/burials on Federal Land where Native Nations/Groups are Federally recognized. He mentioned the Historic Preservation Act that oversees the National Register of Historical Sites. There is an advisory list which includes how burials should be treated that include; treat with dignity and respect, always use consultation, use the expertise of Indian tribes, do not disturb, remove carefully, contact federal agency responsible and the federal process should start with tribes. The Department of Historic Preservation is the consulting party. Vermont passed an unmarked burial law in 2011. There is an established fund for enforcement and dealing with these burials held by the Department of Housing. There are laws about all the processes; removing bodies etc. Jeff Benay talked about the sites that became exposed when housing excavation was happening in the 1990's. Jess talked about the state buying the properties that stipulates the Abenaki would be the stewards of the land in perpetuity.
